PREFACE

By Clarence R. Geier and Joseph W. A. Whitehorne

The following data compilation is a labor of love done out of a profound respect for those of both sides who saw action at the Battle of Cedar Creek. Raised with his brothers and sister in the Strasburg, Virginia, locale, Mike Kehoe and his siblings spent much of their time running over the open agricultural fields and woodlands that were the battlefields of Cedar Creek and Fisher's Hill. As a group they came to love the land and the history and prehistory that it held. From early on, Mike focused on the local Civil War history, and with his brothers Sam and Pat, came to know and document many of the military encampments and battlefield sites that dotted the land. Most recently he has allied himself with historians and archaeologists to aid in the comprehensive study and documentation of both Fisher's Hill and, as evidenced by the initial volume, Cedar Creek battlefields. More importantly, he came to appreciate the real and profound sacrifice made by individual soldiers of both sides who fought and died, many in terrible circumstances, on fields now known for their agricultural productivity and year-round picturesque beauty. Men from across the Confederacy joined with Virginians, many from the Shenandoah Valley, to confront Union soldiers coming from as far away as Iowa, Maine and Vermont, most of whom could probably not locate the Shenandoah valley on a map before the war.

The time, effort, and dedication that went into finding and gathering the information on the Union and Confederate casualties was extensive and reveals a commitment that goes far beyond simple interest. While aided by information on the internet, the fact is that tremendous time was spent pouring through many sources data, often finding only a single piece of information. Along with the National Archives, Mike made numerous visits to library and museum archives throughout the eastern United States to research diaries, family letters, journals, unit histories and other official records. Newspaper archives from national media of the time, and from the hometowns of the veterans of Union and Confederate brigades and regiments, were invaluable in providing lists of local casualties. While the records at the National Cemetery at Winchester were a major data source, visits were made to other national and community cemeteries, in many cases to walk the graves searching for interred soldiers.

Cedar Creek was a decisive Union victory. As with many Civil War battles, the care of the wounded and dead was often left to the victor. In this case, for the wounded of both sides this proved to be advantageous to their survival. While medical care had improved considerably by the end of the War, one feature mandated by Union Maj. Gen. Sheridan was the establishment of one of the largest field/tent hospitals constructed during the Civil War. It was located at Shawnee Springs on the southeast side of Winchester. Known as the Sheridan Field Hospital, within a few days of the September 19, 1864, Third Battle of Winchester, with medical personnel, staff, supplies and materials previously loaded at Harpers Ferry and elsewhere, the vast hospital camp took form, reaching into the town and using hotels and private homes as overflow facilities. Local farmhouses, churches, barns and other structures were used for triage and hospital sites. Belle Grove and the Stickle Mills, for example, were used for temporary medical care, particularly by the South. A temporary initial Union field hospital was established at Newtown for initial care of all wounded and emergency surgery. From there, wounded were transported to the primary hospital facilities at Winchester, and as needed, from there, by rail, to hospital sites in the North, particularly Baltimore and Philadelphia for recuperation or more specialized care. These hospitals kept records on the nature of the wounds and care given. Cemeteries for those who died were unfortunate extensions of these, the deceased of the two sides placed separately.

Because of the Union role in medical care for the wounded, some information on those Confederates in their custody is available, along with identification of those who were taken prisoner of war. The care of battlefield dead was another matter. The chaos in the identification of human remains in the Civil War, led to the use of metal identification tags as standard in WWI. That did not help those in the Civil War, however. While individual soldiers made efforts to allow themselves to be identified in case of their death, such efforts were not widespread or mandatory. During and following battles, personal items of the dead and even wounded often became spoils of war, causing the loss of things such as watches, rings, etc. that might have provided identification for the dead. At Cedar Creek this was certainly a problem and there are accounts of Union dead and wounded who were stripped naked by Confederate soldiers to whom even the most basic items were seen as luxury goods. Battlefield looting, particularly of the exposed and remaining Union camps was seen as a contributing factor to Early's loss of momentum on the morning of October 19, 1864.

Since the battlefields were in the hands of the victorious Union Army, the burial of the dead was its responsibility. This effort would have varied significantly. Because Confederate dead were of the enemy and, for the most part, were not individually known by the members of the burial teams, their large numbers would have mandated a burial that would have been quick and probably met minimal requirements. While some may have been buried in shallow graves near where they fell, others may have been gathered on wagons for mass burial in convenient depressions, sinkholes, etc. Personal items of value would probably disappear, becoming the property of the grave diggers. While exact patterns of burial are uncertain, it is evident that farms and fields owned by the Cooley's (Belle Grove), Bragg's, Hennings, Sperry's, Heater's, Miller's, and others, became vast cemeteries for both Union and Confederate dead.

In 1861, the US War Department issued General Order No. 75 which designated commanding officers as being responsible for the burial of the dead from their units. This mandated that a reasonable effort would be made to bury human remains and that an effort would be made to ensure that bodies were identified with at least a name, a desire that led some soldiers to go into battle with their names and units pinned onto their uniform. Again, when time allowed and when burial units were available, Union forces made an effort to avoid anonymous burial, identify graves, and keep records of interment, an effort that grew increasingly more sophisticated as the war dragged on. In many cases an effort was made to gather personal items to return to the family of the deceased. In principle, commanding officers were required to keep records of deceased soldiers and their burial site location.

In contrast to the lack of ceremony surrounding the disposition of the dead on or near fields of battle, conditions in Union camps and hospitals allowed for more conventional burial practices that maintained older traditions. Camps and hospitals had more time and resources to take care of these matters. Many also had space singled out for use as cemeteries, which provided a readily available and organized location for disposal. Burials at hospitals often included soldiers who died from diseases such as typhoid fever, dysentery, etc. The close proximity of soldiers in camp made such deaths commonplace.

In July of 1862, faced with an unprecedented number of battlefield dead, the U. S. Congress passed legislation authorizing the president to purchase land for the establishment of cemeteries for those fighting on behalf of the United States (not the Confederacy). While several cemeteries were established that were designed to accommodate the deceased of particular battles, in 1867 the Office of the U. S. Quartermaster General established a network of National Cemeteries designed to ensure a proper burial for every Union soldier and sailor who died during the war. The Winchester National Cemetery serves as the local product of this law. As noted by Mike below, battlefield dead at Cedar Creek, and those initially interred at the Newtown field hospital and the Methodist Cemetery in Winchester were re-buried there along with Union soldiers who died at the Sheridan Field Hospital.

The “Act to Establish and Protect National Cemeteries”, passed in 1867 posed a significant problem in that it absolutely prohibited the burial of Confederate dead in National cemeteries and provided no funds or benefits for such interments. In the latter 1860s when the dead were being removed, Confederate dead found lying immediately next to those of the Union were left in place, no effort being made to document them.

The burial of Confederate dead was left to private groups, particularly women’s organizations in former Confederate states, to organize efforts at reburial. The former Confederate states assumed no fiscal responsibility for burial of their dead. Significantly, one of the first Ladies Memorial Associations was in Winchester and was organized by Mary Dunbar Williams. By 1868, more than 20 such organizations had been established across Virginia. The Union practice of ignoring the Confederate dead during reburial efforts incited increased activity by the Ladies’ Memorial Associations in the spring of 1866. The seven associations of Richmond, Lynchburg, Winchester, Petersburg, and Fredericksburg alone reinterred more than 72,520 remains, nearly 28 percent of the South’s total war dead (Janney 2020). Again, referencing the data gathered by Kehoe below, local Confederate cemeteries or burial lots are at Mt. Jackson, Charlottesville, Harrisonburg’s Woodbine Cemetery, Staunton’s Thornrose Cemetery, and the Stonewall Jackson Cemetery in Winchester. Many of those in the latter would have died in the vast hospital complexes at Winchester.

Differing senses of responsibility for the re-interment of the dead provide real differences in the data obtained by Kehoe. While many of the Union battlefield dead’s initial graves can be attributed to farm lots located on the battlefield, no such information exists for the Confederate dead. There is also the issue of care of burial records and recording of information at the time of interment. Under the best of circumstances, it would be unreasonable to assume that all Union dead on a battlefield as vast as that of Cedar Creek would have been located and buried, much less reburied. Despite the greater care given to documenting Union remains, many may have been missed, and, indeed, many lost their identity; the names of the recovered being lost in the process.

For the large number of Confederate dead, given the lack of care in documenting burial sites and names by their enemies, despite the best efforts of those sent to recover their remains, it is unlikely that all were recovered. As time passed any effort to mark gravesites would have been lost, and the likelihood of relocating all of the individual graves of those buried where they fell would have been difficult, particularly as local farmers sought to reclaim their fields.

The issue of “casualties” also includes those made prisoner of war. While Confederate wounded were cared for in Winchester, those made prisoner on the battlefield were sent to Point Lookout, Maryland. Despite the Union victory, large numbers of Federal troops were captured and were not recovered, those ending up at the Confederate prison in Salisbury, North Carolina. As an understatement, the life in these camps approached a hell on earth, with numerous individuals dying from exhaustion, starvation, chronic diarrhea and other diverse but deadly diseases. These unfortunates were buried in vast cemeteries associated with these prisons, most in unmarked graves.

Mike Kehoe has cut through the administrative chaos to provide the most thorough accounting of Cedar Creek casualties. In doing so he has added significantly to the interpretation of the battle. Unit casualty densities finally reflect the levels of combat at many key times and places with high accuracy. This allows for a far deeper understanding of the battle while also serving as a check on other less substantial narratives.

INTRODUCTION

By Michael Kehoe

It has been over 155 years since the American Civil War ended. To this day, many questions still linger about what happened to so many of the participants and victims of that war. Throughout the country, there are numerous graveyards and grave sites that have the words “Unknown” inscribed on stone markers. Some markers have a hint of who the soldier may have been by providing a little information such as initials, a date of death, or the state the soldier was from. Sometimes there may be nothing but the words ‘A Confederate Soldier’ or ‘A Union Soldier’ inscribed on the stone. But often there is just a depression in the ground to mark where a soldier had been laid to rest.

Like so many in Virginia, the land that I was raised upon and where I roamed was part of a battlefield. For me, this was the Battle of Cedar Creek in the lower Shenandoah Valley, fought on October 19, 1864. I was surrounded with the reminders of that action. At an early age my grandparents instilled upon me a sense of the history of the land and appreciation for it. There was something special about the place. This was the high ground overlooking Cedar Creek with a wonderful view of the Shenandoah Valley. Massanutten Mountain rises on the east side of the Valley and North Mountain on the west, with the Valley floor in between. On a clear day you could see the mountains for nearly 50 miles or more trailing off in the distance to the southwest. This was where the Union Army under General Philip H. Sheridan lay content in its recent victories over the Confederate Army under General Jubal A. Early. It was also the scene of the infamous ‘Burning’ of the Valley in October 1864 by Sheridan’s Army. From these same heights, just a few days before the Battle of Cedar Creek, columns of smoke rose from the southwest as over 2,000 barns, 70 mills, and some homes were burned in order to destroy the agrarian base that had been supporting the Confederate Army (National Park Service [NPS]. The Burning, Cedar Creek and Belle Grove National Historical Park [CCBGNHP] website)

This was also the place that Confederate General Jubal Early roused the ‘Yanks’ out of bed on October 19, 1864, in a surprise attack, killing, wounding and capturing hundreds as they withdrew towards Middletown and Winchester. It was also the place of the Hites and Bowmans, some of the earliest settlers in the Valley. Before them it was the land of the First People with some sites dating back thousands of years, established near the mouth of Cedar Creek with the North Fork of the Shenandoah River.

The oldest generation alive in the 1950’s and 60s had lived during, or had known someone with first-hand knowledge of, the Civil War. There were a handful of Civil War veterans still living into the 1930’s and 40’s, and even a scant few into the 1950s. This would have been the same for the women and children who lived in those times. The following generations continued to remember and share the oral histories they had heard. Many of the schoolteachers at that time were the granddaughters of Civil War veterans. Some belonged to the United Daughters of the Confederacy which held an annual essay contest for middle school children about Civil War topics, usually a biography about a noted military or civilian personage of that time. The teachers would sometimes tell stories to the students in their classes about the Civil War times that they were familiar with. I can also recall conversations of farmers that would come into Lineburg’s Service Station in Strasburg to tell their tales of cannonballs, bayonets, and other artifacts that they had plowed up in the fields. Sometimes they would repeat the stories they knew while we, the younger ones, would listen to their conversations. One story in particular that I remember hearing was about a Springfield musket with a burned wooden stock that was found lying against a tree on Massanutten Mountain.

The years between 1959 and 1965 saw much publicity concerning the Civil War, beginning with the 100th anniversary of John Brown’s Raid at Harpers Ferry in 1859. This began what was called the Centennial Years that concluded with the anniversary of the surrender of the Confederate Army at Appomattox Court House in the spring of 1865. During this period there were numerous and often lengthy newspaper articles printed, new books were written about the war and the battles fought, and older histories and diaries were republished. A television show about Mosby's Rangers called The Grey Ghost became a weekly program. During this time, reenactments of Civil War battles became frequent events, museums with Civil War artifacts and memorabilia opened, and there was an increase in Civil War roadside signs put in place. The new signage often included maps, interpretation of battles and troop movements, and other points of interest, all of which helped to enhance tourism.

These stories and the increased coverage of the Civil War instilled a greater awareness in local history with me. I became a product of that environment and developed an inquisitiveness to learn more about those times. The four years between 1861-1865 were like no other in our country's history in that the entire population was affected. According to recent figures compiled by historians, over 1,087,000 Americans from the North and the South were killed, wounded, captured, or missing as a result of the war. The more populous North suffered a larger number of casualties, many of them newly arrived immigrants, but the South lost a greater percentage of its people. One in three Confederate households lost at least one person due to the war. Another way of looking at it is that there was an 18% death rate of the men who went to war for the South. 1 in 13 men who returned from the war was an amputee. These returning men certainly bore lifelong affects, both physical and mental, from their war experiences. In the 20th Century, psychological effects took on the term and diagnosis of Post-Traumatic Stress Syndrome. In the years after the Civil War, homicides continued at a high rate as did crime in general. Post war newspapers, particularly in the South, are full of incidents of murder and robbery. The destitution left by the war led many people to violent acts and young men who had already experienced maiming and killing continued to settle scores through fighting, feuds, and even duels. There were far more killings in the aftermath of the Civil War in both the North and South than in the Old West as is so often portrayed. The crime wave continued from 1865 into the next decade and beyond. The causes were many, as were the consequences of both winning and losing a war. "The epidemic of crime is a sequel to war as men learn in the school of war to think little of life." (Edith Abbot The Civil War Crime Wave, Edith Abbot, Social Service Review, Vol 1. June 1927.)

After the Civil War, life became a struggle of survival for many people in the South, where most of the war had taken place. So much property, infrastructure, and lives had been destroyed that it disrupted not only the generations of the time but also those that followed well into the 20th Century.

At the time of the Civil War Centennial, 100 years later, landscapes shaped by the war were still evident. Except at Harpers Ferry, no other National Battlefield Parks had been created in the Valley because farming was still the major land use. The stone walls of the burned-out mill at Cedar Creek at the Valley Pike crossing and old stone bridge abutments were still visible, as were the Union earthworks and fortifications on the heights above the Creek. In addition, thousands of artifacts were being found each year by a new innovation: the metal detector. After I-81 was constructed in the 1960s, the Valley landscape began to change more rapidly each year as the Interstate corridor brought more commercial and industrial development to the Valley. It was a welcome addition to the tax base, creating jobs, but along with that also came the expansion of suburbia as more and more people moved within commuting distance of the Washington, DC metropolis. With that, the battlefield landscapes and those housing the associated Union camps began to disappear. Indeed, many historic battlefield sites can now only be recognized by a seemingly out of place historic sign beside the road.

And then there were the forgotten monuments and markers that were left by soldiers during the war or later, when, as venerable veterans, they returned to commemorate the Fields of Honor where so many of their comrades had fallen. It was also where they had witnessed the scenes of war personally, rather than from a historical reference. In the woods at Cedar Creek there is a large marble boulder. It is a monument erected and dedicated by survivors of the 8th Vermont Infantry in 1885. It was originally visible from the Valley Pike and was placed at or near the location where the regiment had lost many men during a severe hand to hand engagement and a struggle over the regimental colors. The Vermont Regiment had a 68% casualty rate of the men engaged, with 110 men out of 165 were killed, wounded or missing. Over time this monument became hidden by underbrush and forgotten. When I first stumbled upon it in 1965 it gave me the impression of coming across an Olmec head in the jungles of Mexico. Since then the ground has been cleared and the monument is now maintained by the National Park Service. A walking trail will take you right to the place and other points of interest on that section of the battlefield. (NPS. The Morning Attacks. CCBGNHP website, www.nps.gov/cebe.)

There are other marked and unmarked stones found across the battlefields where the meanings have become obscure as to why these markers were there to begin with. Three markers in particular caught my interest at Cedar Creek. One was a 12 x 18-inch marble slab that lay against the trunk of an old cedar tree at the edge of a wood where the early morning attack occurred. This was the advanced position of the 1st Division 8th Corps on the left flank of Sheridan's army. It was inscribed with the initials GPM and the dates 10/19/1864 and 1905. The local story was that a soldier had returned in 1905 to place the marker at the location where he had been shot and lost a leg. The rest was a mystery.

Another stone marker can be found in the old orchard ground at the Daniel Stickley house where the old pike crossed Cedar Creek. This marker has the inscription John Helms of Atlanta, Ga. and the date October 19, 1864. The soldier had died of wounds at the Stickley home which had been used as a hospital. The young soldier was buried in the nearby orchard upon the request of a comrade who said he would return to retrieve the body, but for whatever reason never did. For many years the soldier remained unidentified but upon a chance meeting in at a UDC Convention in Atlanta, Georgia in 1909, Laura Stickley, who was a child during the battle, met an old veteran. He claimed to be the comrade of the soldier who had died, and provided a name, but information as to the regiment that he belonged to has never clear.

A third marker on the battlefield is a Virginia Historical Wayside marker that stands along US Rte. 11 about a mile south of Middletown. It was placed within view of the peak of Massanutten Mountain, known today as Signal Knob. The marker has the title Tomb of Unknown Soldier. The historic marker was placed there to tell of the significance of the peak used as a signal station during the Civil War, when it was called Three Top Mountain or Pitman's Peak. It commemorates a soldier's grave somewhere on the mountain that was never identified and lost to time.

I began seeking information as to whom these forgotten soldiers were as a much younger man, looking through the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion (ORs) and regimental histories, and sometimes by visiting the Library of Congress. As I came across names of soldiers who were casualties, I decided to keep a record of the person's name along with other pertinent information. Then in 2012, I took upon myself a challenge to identify all the soldiers, on both sides, who had become casualties at the Battle of Cedar Creek by the time of the 150th anniversary of the battle; then two years away. I began to record names and other specific data as to dates, age, rank, units, places, casualty information, amputations, prisoner information, hospital information, discharges and deaths and burial locations if known. At the same time, I also began to save information of losses that occurred elsewhere in the Shenandoah Valley. I soon discovered that it was much easier to just record the information once viewed than to have to retrace where it came from and to look for it again. I also discovered that there are a vast number of resources that could be checked for this data, sometimes repetitive but often with a bit of new information contributing to a clearer understanding of the information sought.

Casualty returns for the Union Army at the Battle of Cedar Creek are found in Vol 43, Part 1 of the Official Records (ORs) and offers numerical figures for killed, wounded, missing, and captured for each regiment and battery engaged. The total came to 5,665 casualties of all types. The Confederate casualties for the same time are rounded numbers of 2,900 and were obtained from General Early's post battle report and later autobiography. General Early's figures were probably based upon returns and action reports taken while his Army of the Valley was encamped at New Market at the end of October and into November 1864. (Millard Bushong, Old Jube, 1961; Compiled Service Records, National Archives, Washington, DC.)

The text in this volume is a long step away from the documented or "official" numerical casualty lists for the battle and could be considered an expanded nominal (named) casualty list. This list, referred to from this point as the Cedar Creek Casualty List (CCCL), is an effort to confirm both the US and CS figures; and to expand the numbers to reveal the intimate cases of the individual soldiers who comprise them. The extensive list of over 9,000 names is separated into two sections, Union and Confederate, and was derived from numerous sources. (See attached bibliography.) The Compiled Service Records, on file at the US Archives in Washington, DC and in some State Archives, are the primary source for both the US & CS soldier's records. This does not mean that I reviewed every regimental record at those facilities because those records have now been made available through a variety of publications and media. Those records typically include induction, muster, hospital, prisoner of war, parole, inspection reports, medical, and death records of individual soldiers. They also include morning and monthly returns kept by company commanders and many other similar records kept on individual soldiers. In years past, most of this information was only made available by filling out and submitting an application form to the US Archives. This method required a processing fee and often took many weeks to get an answer. The other method was to visit a state library and look at microfilm of that state's military records. In recent years, however, Fold3, a web site that provides military records has made most of the CSRs for Confederate units available. Unfortunately, that is still not the case for much of the Union army records which are limited to indexed cards that can be found at the US Archives, the exceptions being for the states of Maryland, Massachusetts, Vermont, and West Virginia which have been microfilmed. For the remaining states and the US Regular Army, records are kept in envelopes for each soldier or sailor at the US Archives. Those records were extracted by War Department clerks in the late 1800s and early 1900s from original military records, largely in a process to verify pension requests.

Another source that was immensely helpful was a website called Lest We Forget, Vermont in the Civil War where information on every Civil War soldier and sailor from that state is available in great detail. The site is managed by Tom Ledoux. The annual Adjutant General Reports for each state were also reviewed. These reports were limited but sometimes the best alternative resource for Northern States when CSRs were not readily available. Other important sources were company rosters found in many regimental histories either as a primary or secondary work. An enormous effort was made by H. E. Howard of Lynchburg Virginia to publish a history of every Virginia military unit with a descriptive roster. This twenty plus year marathon was completed in 2004 by using individual authors to write over 200 histories including relevant photos and maps. A similar effort to chronicle the military history of each South Carolina military unit during the Civil War began in 2008 by Broadfoot Publishing Company, and now there are a number of South Carolina regimental histories along with descriptive rosters completed.

Contemporary newspaper articles that included casualty lists for the relevant actions were sought out and reviewed (Toms Brook, Hupp's Hill, Cedar Creek, etc). These were found in digital archives kept by many libraries and online historical newspapers websites. The Chronicling America website maintained by The Library of Congress has a vast collection of newspapers from the earliest periods of the country that have been digitized. Newspaper sources were helpful, but many were filled with errors such as misspelled names and hearsay that often occurred in the 'fog of war' in the immediate aftermath of a battle. Diaries, letters, and post-war accounts were other valuable resources. New information continues to be uncovered to the present time.

The resulting database is provided as an Addendum to the most recent study of the Battle of Cedar Creek prepared by Drs. Geier and Whitehorne and to which I contributed. This comprehensive casualty list helps to provide an accounting of the terrible cost of war that occurred on just one day of the Civil War. In order to allow space for publication, columns with age, location, date and other information were dropped. Those columns, however, exist on the broader electronic version. Detail is commensurate with the information available which varies from regiment to regiment and state to state. In the South many records were lost or were never kept during the last year of the war. Rank is shown for officers and non-commissioned officers (NCO's) but not for enlisted men (viz. privates). Bright yellow highlights indicate when a soldier was killed or died of wounds; lighter yellow color indicates when a soldier died as a result of being a prisoner of war (POW) even after his release due to the deleterious effect of prison life on the soldier. Whenever found, the burial location of a soldier who died as a result of the Battle of Cedar Creek and its contributing actions has been provided. Whenever the comment appears No Burial Record Found, it is more than likely that the soldier was buried as Unknown.

This work is not to be considered complete. Many edits have been made and will continue to be made when additional data or corrections are found. NFR or NFI meaning No Further Record or Information will often follow a soldier's history when it ended without explanation. In some instances, however, cross referencing produced an answer to what happened to him. Occasionally, a new name continues to be found or, as is sometimes the case, deleted because of incorrect information.

As stated earlier, and as published in the OR's, the total Union casualties as a result of the Battle of Cedar Creek were 5,665 men, broken down into 644 killed, 3,430 wounded, and 1,591 missing or captured. These numbers are essentially correct although the overall count in this work actually exceeds the numbers in the OR. While reviewing so many records I often came across a number of duplications because of misspelled names. Corrections were made, in many cases the multiple spellings are shown in parenthesis. Sometimes a soldier was transferred to another unit and his casualty may have been attributed to both. Whenever this was discovered the unit that the soldier served in at the time of the Battle has been used. In particular the 34th and 36th Ohio Volunteer Infantry (OVI) Regiments have proven to be problematic because they were consolidated on paper the day of the battle but were in two different brigades.

I attribute some of the higher numbers in the CCCL to post war claims by soldiers who were wounded at Cedar Creek. This may have been the case for some slightly wounded soldiers who never left the field, or who returned to duty within a short period of time and thus were not counted as casualties. Years later they made the claim of injuries when applying for pensions as veterans of the Civil War. Widow's claims were also a source for information. In some obituaries there were statements that the deceased had been wounded at Cedar Creek. Then there were just those who made claims as a stretch to their actual service record that could not be verified; perhaps to sometimes to gain publicity. As an example, Augustus Buell wrote a very detailed and believable account of his service in Battery M 5th US Artillery called The Canoneer, Recollections of Service in the Army of the Potomac, filled with accurate descriptions and names. The problem was that Buell was never in the artillery although he did serve in the 20th NY Cavalry. He was not in action at Cedar Creek.

Compiling the database has also resulted in a number of observations. It became evident that the remains of most Union officers who were killed or died of wounds or disease were buried in their hometown either soon after they died, or were later repatriated. The higher the rank the more often this occurred, but not always.

There is a large contingent of Union soldiers buried at the Winchester National Cemetery as Unknown. This would seem inconsistent with the fact that Sheridan's victorious army held the field of battle at Winchester, Fishers Hill, and Cedar Creek, the three major battles of the 1864 campaign in the Valley. This unfortunate loss of individual identity is understandable. Usually, a soldier was buried on the battlefield as soon as practicable; sometimes where they fell, but often in communal burial trenches. Often the graves were no more than 18 to 24 inches deep and were marked with crude headboards with some sort of identification painted or scratched into them. The IDs eroded away within a few years. Sometimes it would just be a field stone marker. In some cases, some graves may not have been marked at all out of a sense of expediency to clear the battlefield of the grotesque sights and disagreeable odor. A Captain in the 24th Iowa Regiment wrote a letter home which said "our battleground is now our camp and our line of tents encroach on the rows of new made graves". In other circumstances also contributed to the lost names. For example, a soldier in the 5th NY Cavalry stated the day following the Battle of Cedar Creek, as the Union Cavalry pursued the Confederates up the Valley, it was noticed that the headboards of their Union comrades who had been killed in the Battle of Toms Brook had been destroyed, used for firewood by the Confederates.

But this often happened at hospital sites too, where there was an overwhelming number of wounded who died from shock, hemorrhage, fatigue, gangrene as a result of amputations, or of disease because of a weakened immune system. Many died at the corps field hospitals set up behind the lines between Middletown and Newtown (today known as Stephens City) and at nearby churches and homes. Triage hospitals were set up in tents and even barns. The Heater family barn just southwest of Middletown was the site of a hospital even before the battle, and continued to be used even as the battle was whirling around it. The Belle Grove mansion was where several high-ranking casualties were taken, notably Confederate General Stephen Ramseur, who died there on the morning after the battle.

Once a soldier was stabilized, he could be transferred to the large Sheridan Field Hospital near Winchester. This extensive tent hospital had been established after the Third Battle of Winchester, a month earlier than the action at Cedar Creek, at Shawnee Springs on the southeast side of the town. This facility was tied to hospitals even farther away at Martinsburg, Frederick, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York. All along the way wounded soldiers continued to die but at a decreasing rate.

There were many soldiers listed as missing. The majority had become prisoners of war but a goodly number had been taken to the field hospitals and became lost in the confusion. Some of these were buried as Unknown as well. Earlier in the war a graveyard had been established for Union soldiers in Winchester near the Methodist Church on the eastern edge of the town. It was known as the East Side Cemetery or Soldiers Cemetery. It was very close to today's Winchester National Cemetery. It became the burial ground for most of the Union soldiers who died in the various hospitals in Winchester and the private homes where soldiers were taken to convalesce. The added care for soldiers that was made available at the Winchester hospitals helped the majority of men recover; however many bore physical and emotional scars for the rest of their lives.

The Union army also suffered a large number of captured and missing men at Cedar Creek. The captured men were marched south on the day of the battle and unfortunately were well away when the successful Union counterattack occurred late in the day. That was when most of the US wagons and artillery pieces that had been captured earlier that day were recaptured by the Federal cavalry at Strasburg. The prisoners reached Staunton within a couple of days where they were placed upon railroad cars and transported to Richmond. There the officers and the enlisted men were separated. Most officers were incarcerated at Libby Prison in Richmond while some wound up as POWs at the tobacco warehouse prisons at Danville, Virginia. Soon after their arrival in Richmond, the enlisted men were relocated further south. On November 4th those who had been captured at Cedar Creek were boarded on trains and traveled to Salisbury, North Carolina, where the prison there was already beginning to be overcrowded and conditions deteriorating with the increasing population of POWs. (Compiled Service Records, National Archives; Salisbury Confederate Prison Association website [www.salisburyprison.org].)

There are some Union regimental histories that state that the men captured at Cedar Creek were sent to the infamous POW camp at Andersonville, Georgia, and died of starvation there. This is incorrect because by October 1864 Andersonville had already been shut down and the inmates transferred to other locations at Savannah, Millen, Georgia, or Florence, South Carolina. Some of the Cedar Creek prisoners were sent to Florence or to Wilmington, North Carolina. Wherever they were sent, the conditions were not good and many succumbed to disease. Throughout the war typhoid fever, chronic diarrhea and pneumonia were the leading cause of deaths to soldiers on both sides and these diseases only accelerated in prisons where weakening from malnutrition contributed to the death toll. There are photos of very emaciated Union POWs who looked very much like skeletons at war's end. Other causes that contributed to the mortality rate were diphtheria, scurvy, smallpox, consumption, or being shot by a guard. Some soldiers were exchanged early on, particularly if they had been wounded and were a burden to the CS hospital system. Regular exchanges happened in January, February, and March 1865 and continued until after the surrender of Generals Lee's and Johnson's armies in April 1865.

The National Cemetery at Salisbury, North Carolina, had its origin as the burial ground for the soldiers who died at the prison there. The figures vary widely, and no one knows for sure how many Union soldiers are actually buried there. Over 3,700 deaths are recorded but figures range to as high as 11,700 Union soldiers who were buried in trenches without coffins or headboards at Salisbury. By the information obtained from the CCCL casualties list it appears that of the 1,430 or so Union soldiers that were captured at Cedar Creek, at least 423 died either in prison or soon after their release. That would mean that nearly one in three of the captured men from that battle died as a consequence of being captured. (Salisbury Confederate Prison Association website [www.salisburyprison.org]).

While the Confederates lost a similar number of prisoners (1,200) at Cedar Creek, most were taken later in the day as Early's army collapsed; in the retreat, at hospital sites, or at homes around Middletown and Strasburg where the wounded had been taken. Captured Confederate sick and wounded soldiers were taken to US hospitals for treatment, many cared for at the Sheridan Field Hospital. Confederate soldiers seem to have been treated as well as the Union soldiers because surgeries, including amputations, appear to have been performed in as timely a manner as possible. Of course, many died of their injuries. Like their Union counterparts, sick and wounded Confederate POWs were transferred as soon as possible to US hospitals in Baltimore or elsewhere. Private George Stillwell of the 53rd Ga Infantry who was wounded in the left foot by a shell fragment at Cedar Creek had the foot amputated at Newtown and convalesced several days with the Davis family near that town until October 24th before traveling by train to a Baltimore hospital. He was then sent to Point Lookout, Maryland, until exchanged on October 29th and then traveled by ship to Savannah, Georgia. He survived the war and always contended that Mrs. Davis, who nursed him, saved his life. Not many months later Mrs. Davis lost her own 16-year-old son to the war on March 6, 1865, at Rudes Hill, north of New Market.

Some continued to die of illness or injuries and were buried at the places where they died. Records are not clear as to where the Confederates were originally buried in Winchester, but likely they were interred in many private and church cemeteries in and about the town. After the war, they were brought together and interred in what is now known as the Stonewall Jackson Confederate Cemetery within the larger Mt Hebron Cemetery across a narrow street from the US National Cemetery. Here 2,575 Confederate soldiers are buried. Of these, 829 unidentified soldiers from the battlefields of Cedar Creek, Cool Springs, Kernstown, and Third Winchester are buried in a mass grave beneath a 30-foot-tall monument in the center of the Cemetery. There are at least 67 more Unknown soldiers buried in the State sections of the cemetery.

As with Union POWs, Confederate officers were separated from the enlisted men. The officers were sent to Fort Delaware on Pea Island in the middle of the Delaware River about 15 miles downstream from Wilmington, Delaware. The Confederate prisoners who died at Fort Delaware are buried on the eastern side of the river in New Jersey at Finns Point National Cemetery in the Confederate section. There are no individual markers. A large obelisk monument stands at the northwest side of the cemetery with the names of Confederates who are buried at its base. Cast into bronze panels are the names of 2,436 Confederate soldiers who died at Fort Delaware during the Civil War.

The Confederate POWs died of the same illnesses as did the Union POWs in the south. At Point Lookout, Maryland, where most of the Confederate enlisted men were sent, there is a large cemetery with 3,033 recorded names of Confederate soldiers buried within. It is believed that a much larger number of POWs died at the camp. Those CS soldiers that survived the ordeal were exchanged in groups that corresponded with the time and number of Union soldiers that were being exchanged. After the surrender of the Confederate armies the inmates were required to take the Oath of Allegiance and to swear to not bear arms against the United States again before being released. The last Confederate POW captured at Cedar Creek, Hayton Davis of the 17th Mississippi, was not released until April 1866, almost a year after Lee's surrender. He was an amputee, losing a leg, and had remained at the Fort McHenry hospital in Baltimore for many months before being paroled (Tri-Weekly Standard, Raleigh NC, April 1966).

Some effort was made by the Union army who held the field on October 19, 1864, to bury the enemy's dead. As often, however, it was left up to the local people to bury their own. Shallow graves were found in the fields and woods, the bodies being often exposed after a hard rain. It is likely that only a few were ever marked with the proper identification. By 1866, Soldiers Cemeteries were beginning to be formalized and the Confederate dead were taken up from the original hastily dug graves on the battlefields. From fence corners, orchards, yards, small rail enclosures, wherever they had been buried; remains of these dead were hauled in wagons to newly established burial grounds in Winchester, Strasburg, Woodstock, Mt Jackson, Harrisonburg, and Staunton, Virginia. This work continued for years. In 1905 four Confederate cavalymen who had been killed in the battle of Toms Brook were reinterred from the Miley farm on the Back Road to the Massanutten Cemetery in Woodstock. One soldier was buried as an Unknown and the names of the other three were identified. For the same reasons as their Union counterparts, many of these soldiers were buried as Unknown. even if the graves had once been marked. Sometimes the remains were taken home if care had been taken to properly mark and identify where a soldier's grave was located. One such Confederate grave was that of Major William Pfohl of the 21st NC Regiment. He was mortally wounded by a shell late in the day at Cedar Creek and was taken to the Presbyterian Church in Strasburg which served as a hospital. After he died, he was buried 20 paces from the NE corner of the church as described in a letter sent home. Later his remains were reinterred to the Moravian Cemetery in Salem, North Carolina. The Strasburg Presbyterian Church being a hospital site throughout the war had both Union and Confederate graves located there. The Union soldiers were removed to the National Cemetery in Winchester. In 1896 a large monument was dedicated to the Confederates still buried at the rear of the church yard. On the monument are the words 'In Memory of 136 Fallen Comrades'. Their graves are unmarked, but the UDC kept a record of some of the names of soldiers brought in from the Fishers Hill, Hupps Hill and Cedar Creek battlefields which are listed in the following casualty list. Monuments were eventually dedicated at all the Confederate Soldier cemeteries but within many old church or community cemeteries can be found the graves of Confederate soldiers who died during the war. I have added the locations whenever I came across such information.

By cross-referencing the information in the CCCL and a bit of interpolation it may be that some soldier's graves can now be identified. As time moves us further away from those epic years of the Civil War the names of those who sacrificed all and those who lost so much are becoming even more forgotten. It is hoped that with the publication of the CCCL that their names are not forgotten even if their final resting place is known but to God.

So, in the beginning of this project, there was a narrow quest to find three or four persons who left their imprint at Cedar Creek. That effort turned into a long list of over 9,000 names. One soldier with the initials GPM was positively identified as Sgt. George P. Morgan of Battery D, 1st Pennsylvania Artillery. In fact, a photo of Sgt. Morgan was discovered of him sitting beside the marker in 1905. John Helms of Atlanta Georgia has still not been positively identified. No record of a Confederate soldier by that name with Early's army at Cedar Creek, either wounded or otherwise, has been found. The search will continue. John Helms may have been one of many new recruits, mostly conscripts, who joined Early's army in the summer and fall of 1864, some of whom may have not been accounted for.

'The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier' on Massanutten Mountain has long been thought to be of another Georgia soldier. I have spent much time seeking to identify the soldier buried on the peak and believe that I was able to not only locate his grave but perhaps learn who he was. The grave may actually be that of a Union soldier who was killed in a skirmish with Early's sharpshooters on August 14 or 15, 1864. His name was Sgt. John Goodwin of Co F, 12th West Va. Infantry. His body was never recovered.

I would like to thank many people who have helped with this project. First and foremost is my wife Kathy, who has supported me and also endured the many hours and days of wandering in the roads and cemeteries all over Virginia looking for answers. It has been a good partnership, she being a researcher and writer herself of local folk history. Our bookshelves at home long ago over overflowed their capacity. I also want to mention my daughters Bridget and Katy, who grew up with my madness but always were very supportive and helpful. My brothers Sam and Patrick walked over the ground of Cedar Creek since we were youngsters and we always turn our discussions to the Civil War at some point when we get together. Sam no longer lives in Virginia but continues to feed me information when he comes across it. Patrick and I continue to explore the Battle of Cedar Creek and other sites of the Civil War not only on the ground but in anything we can read and share. My sister Sarah shares the same interest. Of course, there are two others that must be mentioned. Dr. Clarence Geier and Dr. Joseph Whitehorne have encouraged me to continue with this work and see its value. Also, Richard Kleese of Strasburg, Virginia, provided much guidance and information. There are many others that I could name but will not because I believe it is better to not mention names than to omit someone, but they know who they are. You have each been a part of my quest to honor the fallen and forgotten.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR:

MICHAEL KEHOE grew up on the Cedar Creek battlefield and has had a lifetime interest in the battle and the ground where it was fought. He studied at Belmont Abbey College and Virginia Commonwealth University and was Town Administrator/Manager for Stephens City, Virginia, from 1981 until his retirement in 2015. He has been involved in many preservation efforts to save battlefield properties, and served on the board of the Cedar Creek Battlefield Foundation for 20 years, holding all of the offices of the organization. He is a long-time member of the Archaeology Society of Virginia and past president of the Northern Shenandoah Chapter. He has many years of experience in all facets of archaeology but favors battlefield archaeology.
